A Second Chance for Ex-Offenders

By THE EDITORIAL BOARD From the New York Times Published: June 19, 2013

The federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) took on an important issue last year when it reaffirmed and updated a ruling that barred employers from automatically denying people jobs based on arrest or conviction records. The guidance made clear that an arrest alone was not proof of illegal conduct or grounds for exclusion. It also explained that, when considering an applicant with a criminal conviction, the employer must take into account the seriousness of the offense, the time lapsed since the offense and the relevance of the crime to the specific job being sought.

The point is to eliminate unfair obstacles to employment for the 65 million Americans who have criminal records, including those based on minor convictions that might have occurred in the distant past.

Daniel LaPlante is serving a life sentence in Massachusetts for murdering a teacher and drown -ing her two children. Now he is suing the state's Department of Corrections and a prison superintendent, claiming that he has been denied access to items he needs to practice his Wiccan faith. The list of 121 items he has requested includes dragon's blood, dandelion, carrot cake with frosting, and pens in seven different colors.

He also wants access to medallions such as "Thor's Hammer" and "Phases of the Moon." Of course, taxpayers would foot the bill as prison authorities hunt down such esoteric items and provide them free of charge Continued on Page 21

California

California Governor Jerry Brown maintains that the state's prison crisis is over and is seeking an end to federal oversight. The completion and development of the New California Health Facility in Stockton is a major step in fulfilling the demands of the ruling. The facility will provide intermediate level medical care with a capacity for over 1,700 patients and will have a medical and support staff of approximately 2,500.

However, Brown's repeated delays to act on the federal court's order to reduce inmate population in line with the earlier demands has resulted in a ruling by a panel of three federal judges that now orders the state to take steps immediately to release approximately 10,000 inmates by the end of the year. The order also requires the state to report these steps to the court every two weeks or be considered in contempt of court. Governor Brown is quoted as saying "The state will seek an immediate stay of this unprecedented order to release almost 10,000 inmates by the end of this year."

On another note: California DJJ reports an increase in Juvenile offenders earning High School diplomas and GED equivalent at the Stockton Youth Correctional Facility. The Ventura Youth Correctional Facility has seen a similar trend in academic achievement. This advance ensures that these graduates are better prepared to return to their communities as more productive and respected citizens.

San Francisco Bay Area based Follow Up Ministries, International continues their emphasis on discipleship training within the prison community through the ministry of rebuilding lives. Recent weekend seminars at Folsom Prison, Susanville, Corcoran, and San Luis Obispo challenged and prepared men and women to return to the cell block with the life changing message of the Gospel and share it with other inmates. Reports also continue to come in from recently appointed FUMI President Tim Wagoner on the results of the One on One mentoring, Bible study, and Chapel service throughout the jails and prisons in the San Francisco Bay area, and in other cities and states throughout our country, as well as outreach at key locations around the world.

Colorado

The recent Institute for Defense and Government Advancement's (IDGA) annual Prisons and Correctional Facilities West Conference convened in Aurora, Colorado. Speakers included: Keynoter, Russell Pilcher CEO of Sierra Detention Systems, Don Head of the Correctional Service of Canada, Charles Ryan of Arizona Department of Corrections, and Colette Peters of Oregon's Department of Corrections.

In these informational and interactive sessions the participants discussed how correctional facilities will look in the year 2020 including security technology within the facilities and state of the art tracking equipment for monitoring inmate movement throughout the prison. The emphasis of the conference centered on innovation, change, rehabilitation, and lower recidivism through reentry programs.

A Word from the Executive Director

Every day at RJMN we receive phone calls and mail regarding aftercare facilities. We receive about 100 letters each month from inmates eligible for parole needing a place to stay, and phone calls from families needing transitional housing for loved ones on the verge of being released from prison.

I have volunteered as the Executive Director for The Huntsville Recovery Center for the past six years. I am very thankful for God allowing me to be part of restoring the lives of dozens of men and helping them reconcile their relationships with God and their families.

The following letter came from our friend Bob Maltz of Conroe. This letter exemplifies the caring nature of people in your neighborhood who are willing to sacrifice their time, energy, and resources to help restore lives in our communities.

Please pray for Bob and all the other folks involved with transitional housing. RJMN has a listing of over 250 faith based halfway houses across Texas. Please feel free to contact RJMN if you are interested in collecting clothes, food or other needed items for a facility near you.

Each individual who successfully transitions into our society saves us taxpayers $35,000 per year.

Each individual who successfully transitions into our society saves us tax payers $35,000 per year. Many halfway houses have given a hand-up to hundreds of individuals. 100 lives times $35,000 equals a savings of 3.5 million dollars.

Give us a call at 1(800) 998-3004 if you would like to know more.

Sincerely,

Bill Kleiber, Executive Director

RJMN of Texas

Here is the letter we received from Bob Maltz:

Guys,

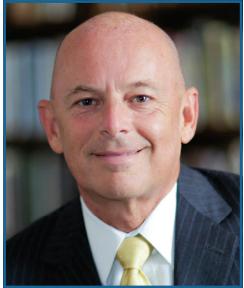

I wrote a quick request for info on the property right across the street and surprisingly got a response a few seconds later. The property is long and narrow with the major portion wooded but would hold a lot of trailers. The land has a lot of potential and the owner wants out.

If this is to be then GOD has to be in it. We all know that our place at Moving On Up Ministry (Helping X Offenders) is full with many, many more needing help every day. We could use a training building or maybe use the room that we already have at the Graceville Baptist Church to give residents more skills about how to deal with people, looking for jobs, using cell phones, where to find resources to better them selves. I need help in this area as I'm tied down somewhat to the carburetor shop and it's bills.

I once had a retired teacher call who was wanting to do something and I invited him to come out and see what we had but I didn't hear from him again. The time is here now, the men are here now, the construction part is done and help is needed to really make a difference. I know if we take on more property it may seem like more than we can handle but God hasn't let us down for a second so far. If we are to continue what we started then more space is needed.

Thoughts on Spiritual Transformation and Offender Rehabilitation

Byron Johnson, Professor Social Sciences, Baylor University

By Byron Johnson May 2013

There are many stories of criminals and prisoners who have experienced dramatic turnarounds as a result of a spiritual conversion. Many of the ministries dedicated to working with prisoners, offenders, and drug addicts are based on the notion that a religious conversion is synonymous with reform or rehabilitation. If one accepts Jesus, then one's needs have been met – not only from an eternal, but temporal perspective.

However, I would argue that becoming "born again" does not exempt a prisoner from facing numerous and formidable challenges following release from prison. Most ex-prisoners struggle to find stable employment, acceptable housing, adequate transportation, and supportive family members. Unfortunately, many inmates who experience religious conversions in prison are either unable or unwilling once released from prison to get connected to local congregations. Because reentry is so difficult, not connecting to a church is a recipe for disaster – effectively separating former prisoners from the support they need in order to live a law-abiding and productive life following release from prison. Without faith-based connections ex-prisoners will not have, for example, a mentor to hold them accountable, and they will not have access to the vibrant networks of social support that exist in so many congregations. These networks and the faith-motivated individuals within these networks can touch each of the areas that are so problematic during prisoner reentry.

I have interviewed hundreds of inmates over the years and when asked about their faith journey many have told me with great disappointment, they simply strayed from the truth and abandoned the commitments they made in prison. Preaching the gospel message in prisons is important to be sure, but unless other faith-based ministries on the outside of prisons are willing to do more to intentionally work with ex-prisoners, it will be difficult for new converts to successfully transition back to society.

I am not suggesting religious conversions are meaningless or that "jailhouse religion" is of little value, and I am not arguing that religious conversions in prison will not stick. Here's why. One of the most well-known delinquency studies of all time was conducted by Sheldon and Eleanor Glueck. The Glueck's published the classic book Unraveling Juvenile Delinquency in 1950, where they studied among other things, 500 troubled boys raised in Boston who had already been involved in delinquent behavior and had been put into reform school. The Glueck's collected extensive records about the boys and tracked them through adolescence. Many years later, Robert Sampson and John Laub, two leading criminologists, would locate the original files from the Glueck's research and would follow-up with the original respondents, to see how they were doing at the age of 60. They found that some of the troubled boys, as one might expect, ended up in trouble with the law for the rest of their lives. Others, however, lived very normal lives and had no legal problems. They found that the troubled kids who would get straightened out experienced some sort of a turning point or event that was Continued on Page 5 pivotal in bringing them out of a criminal lifestyle or path, and into a more traditional and law-abiding pattern of behavior. In other words, people can and do change. Just because a person starts out on the wrong track, does not mean that they are destined to stay on the wrong track the rest of their life.

Unfortunately, scholars have been reluctant to discuss how turning points within the individual may lead to the formation of important and positive social bonds. In recent years, however, several scholars have found that changes in the individual must take place before that person is ready to develop ties and connections to social institutions. Stated differently, the individual must change if the bond is to form. Peggy Giordano and her colleagues call this kind of change cognitive transformation. For them, these cognitive transformations are essential before a person is able to sustain a new way of life. Moreover, they suggest faith can be a source of external control over an individual's conduct as well as a catalyst for forming a new cognitive blueprint for how one is to proceed as a changed individual. This process of change is facilitated by faith or spirituality, whether through an affiliation with a religious congregation, or based more on personal spiritual experiences, or both. This process makes possible the development of a new and more positive identity to replace the old one associated with any or all of the following – failure, violence, abuse, addiction, heartbreak, and guilt.

Just because a person starts out on the wrong track, does not mean that they are destined to stay on the wrong track the rest of their life.

Religious experiences can be critical turning points or events in the lives of offenders and may put into motion a sequence of events that become pivotal in changing a person's behavioral trajectory. The conversion itself can provide a bridge to other faith-motivated individuals and resources that can prove instrumental in having a tipping effect in a person's life. Further, these religious conversion experiences – especially if nurtured – are foundational for spiritual transformation that develops over time. It is this process that can help offenders to start their lives over. Stated differently, offenders get a chance to rewrite their own narrative which can be a powerful and redemptive thing, giving ex-prisoners the hope and purpose they need to start a new and pro-social life, while at the same time, helping them come to grips with the anti-social life they have left behind.

Every year hundreds of thousands of prisoners participate in religious services and interact with faith-motivated volunteers and mentors. Many of these offenders have had religious conversions. In and of itself, this may not mean a great deal to criminologists, correctional practitioners, or policy-makers. However, faith-based prison programs, and more importantly, faith-based reentry and aftercare programs, have the potential to build upon these religious conversions. Religious conversions should not be viewed cynically as "jailhouse religion," but rather as the opportunity to connect these converts to volunteers and faith-based networks that can facilitate and nurture spiritual transformation.

New resource for prison families & those serving them

"The Unvarnished Truth about the Prison Family Journey", co-authored by conference chair, Carolyn Esparza, LPC and Phillip Yow, a Texas prisoner, is a bold, yet practical resource for prison family members and those serving them in such fields as criminal justice, mental health and social service, ministry and education.

Grace Bauer, Co-Director of Justice for Families and Keynote presenter at the 2012 Prisoner's Family Conference graciously reviewed the book saying, "The authors effectively weave personal, emotional and legal perspectives into a powerful guide with a significant amount of very valuable information. What is most impressive is the reality of it all. ... I believe the substance of this book is rare and very much needed."

The book can be ordered online at www.createspace.com/4169772.

A Word from the Executive Director

The Parole people of Texas Department of Criminal Justice (TDCJ) called last week and needed a place to put a young man of 21 years for a few days as they couldn't find a place for him at the time. They knew of us and had enough respect and trust that they called us for help. I told them we have one trailer that's temporarily empty because we were forced to ask a resident who is on parole to leave while we applied to TDCJ to get on their Alternate Housing List. The paperwork is in process now and should be hearing from TDCJ shortly but the trailer is available for now.

They came that same evening with Chris. Kathy and I and other residents made sure the trailer was stocked up with food and necessary items before they showed up. It makes a person feel good to know that someone who has nothing to feel welcome in a new surroundings. Chris is on a monitor with limited restrictions and is still allowed to go to church, stores etc. Parole asked if need be could Chris stay a little longer and we said sure. We have a good relationship with Parole already but this may be a door opening for better things to come.

Pray, pray if you will. I'm not afraid if this doesn't go anywhere because I'm not stopping the search for God and where ever He goes and directs, that's where I want to be. Jesus has been more real to me and others here than any other time in our lives and I want more of Him.

I'm not afraid if this doesn't go anywhere because I'm not stopping the search for God and where ever He goes and directs, that's where I want to be.

May His Peace be with you,

Bob Maltz Moving On Up Ministry

Texas man's evangelism tract reaching thousands

By David Roach/TEXAN September 2012

HOUSTON (BP) -- A new gospel tract published by Houston businessman David Howell has been read by at least 15,000 people -- most of them prisoners -- since June, and many have reported that God used it to change their lives.

Titled "How to be a Child of God," the graphic, comic-book style booklet explains the concept of being crucified with Christ, presented by the apostle Paul in Galatians 2:20. An accompanying video presents its message online with automation and professional voiceover.

"You don't see any words like 'redemption' and 'salvation.' There's just plain talk about how to become a child of God," Howell told the TEXAN. "I try to keep it as simple as possible for those who haven't been around church and have never heard those terms."

Howell, a member of Houston's Second Baptist Church, began writing the tract more than five years ago after he became frustrated that other tracts leave out important points of the Gospel and basic Christian living. Often he found himself asking to meet with new believers who came to Christ through a different tract in order to explain more.

After Howell wrote the text, he asked a team to review it, including staff members at Second Baptist. Then he contracted artist Randy Rogers to produce drawings that illustrated the message. Eventually Howell produced the video as well.

He planned to print a limited supply of the tract and felt God leading him to send it to prisons and rehabilitation centers. But when he consulted a friend familiar with prison ministry, Howell realized God was opening a door for much wider distribution.

"He said, 'It's dynamite, man. It's colorful. It's exactly what [prison ministries] want -- easy to understand. You've got Bible verses already in it. They don't have to have a Bible ... It's perfect," Howell said.

His friend gave him the name of each prison chaplain in the state and told him to send 100 copies to each. With 114 prisons, that translated into 11,400 copies. So Howell printed 15,000 on the first run in June. When those ran out, he printed another 10,000 and has given out most of those, too.

Prison chaplains "have been calling and wanting more," Howell said. "I gave 3,000 to the Harris County jail and they wanted 11,000."

Howell regularly receives letters from prisoners and prison chaplains telling him how God used the tract.

It also proved popular at rehab centers. While visiting a 12-step recovery group recently, a man whom he had given a copy a month earlier told Howell the tract was "exactly what I needed."

The man went on to say, "I was looking for a spiritual connection of some sort ... I had grown up in the church, and I had a wife that used to take me and beat me over the head with the Bible -- I just never got it. And I got real resentful toward her and I just shunned the entire thing. But in that book that you gave me I saw how simple it was."

The video is designed to reach Internet users ages 25-40. One pastor liked it so much that he embedded it on his church's website. Howell encourages others to do the same.

Young adults "get their information from the Internet," he said. "So I said, 'I've got to get on the Internet. The only way to do that is with a video.' That brought me into doing the video based on the book."

In addition to introducing people to Jesus for the first time, Howell hopes his tract and video will help them persevere in their commitment by explaining that a Believer's old self must die with Christ and he must become a Continued on Page 22

God's Feet in My Sandbox by Rick Anderson

As Reviewed by Richard R. Blake for Reader Views

Faith Chronicles of a Texas Death Row Chaplain

The Struggle to Reconciling Faith and Justice, Love and Hope
Author Rick Anderson openly chronicles his spiritual journey.
His story begins as a twenty-one year old loser with an alcohol problem contemplating suicide. He goes on to candidly share the events that led to divorce and remarriage. He describes how he surrendered to preach the Gospel. He relates the experiences behind a decision to adopt a Chinese orphan, of losing his wife to breast cancer, and of later finding love again.

In my review I have tried to go beyond the information shown on the back cover of the book to alert the potential reader that much of the story leads up to the highlights of his ministry on Death Row. For other readers, the subtitle "Faith Chronicles of a Texas Death Row Chaplain" may lead to similar expectations.

Rick tells of his experiences as a Chaplain ministering to condemned men on Death Row at the Polunsky Unit of a Texas prison. He details the events that led to his being made a scapegoat by the Texas Department of Criminal Justice in their effort to place blame on him for an embarrassing death threat against a Texas State Senator which was posted on the internet.

I personally was drawn into Anderson's narrative right from the beginning. The prologue beautifully explains the basis of the title "God's Feet Are In My Sandbox." I also was very impressed with the way Anderson introduced encouraging words from the Psalms and other selected scripture passages that added spiritual insight and encouragement, promise, and inspiration to the incidents of the preceding narrative.

Many readers will appreciate the clarity with which Anderson presents the Gospel message. Other readers may be looking for more detailed insight into the role, duties, and policies applicable to prison chaplaincy. Anderson draws attention to ongoing discipline practices often prevalent behind the scenes in the prison environment, of the need for prison reform, restorative justice, and into the ongoing debate regarding the death penalty. I have been moved again to re-examine God's involvement in the "Sand Box" of my life.

Mercy Heart Chapel Program Seeks a Church

Mercy Heart Chapel Program is looking for a church to commit to offer support groups for the families of inmates at their church. These groups are Bible studies such as: Recovery Groups, Support Groups and Children Ministries set aside on a separate night specifically for the families of inmates. They are typically offered weekly, depending on the availability of the church. Training is available for interested churches through Mercy Heart. Check us out at www.mercyheart.org and like us on FACEBOOK at Mercy Heart National.

Mercy Heart is a place where Christian love, understanding, and acceptance are given to those deeply hurt by incarceration. Parents, spouses, and children are taught how to deal with feelings of hopelessness, guilt, defeat and discouragement by introducing them to a loving heavenly Father who cares for them. They can make the adjustment to incarceration in a safe, family-friendly environment. Instruction, prayer, worship, and ministry are made available without fear of condemnation.

Mercy Heart is a place where previously incarcerated citizens (PIC's) can successfully navigate re-entry back into their community; where he or she can reconnect with family through counseling and other community-based resources.

Mercy Heart also provides a service called Legacy Day with Dad – Day with Mom: A ministry with families "Behind the wire; inside the prison walls". The purpose of this work is to share the legacy of Jesus Christ (His love, hope and comfort) with inmates, their elementary aged children, and the children's caregivers (spouses, grandparents, guardians). This is a one day weekend event done inside the prison. It is designed to bring families together before release in an encounter that utilizes a series of activity-based exercises specific to the needs of the children of the family.

In His Service,

James Guerra, Director of Church/Community Programming Mercy Heart 817-514-0290

and parole offices. The Act is designed to reduce the growth rate of those incarcerated in the state by monitoring released prisoners.

Michigan

Similar to other states around the country Michigan is looking for ways of controlling prison costs and lower spending to reinvest the savings to reduce recidivism rates and preparing inmates to transition back into society. Recent changes include the increased use of probation and parole; and the use of electronic tethers for lower-level offenders in lieu of incarceration. Michigan has led the nation in length of average time inmates serve time in prison. State officials are calling for a look at long overdue sentencing reform.

Iowa

The Iowa Department of Human Right's Division of Criminal and Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention is the recipient of a three year $750,000 federal grant. The funds will be used to provide resources to appraise current programs by comparing and measuring the effectiveness of other evidence based alternatives in an effort to improve services aimed at reducing recidivism and providing public safety at lower costs.

Ohio

In the aftermath of the school shootings in Connecticut and Colorado last year, the state of Ohio is directing significant federal grant money to community projects with a designed focus on at risk youth who have a history of belligerent or violent behavior. Crisis response and support intervention teams are other issues to be considered in an individual community's planning.

West Virginia

West Virginia reportedly has consistently seen an increase it its prison population resulting in housing approximately 1,700 prisoners in regional jails. The state Legislature recently passed Governor Earl Ray Tomblin's prison reform bill. The bill calls for early release for nonviolent offenders and reduces sentencing of probation violators. Provision is made for augmenting supervision of post-release inmates and those sentenced to drug treatment centers. These measures anticipate that this will halt prison growth rates saving millions of dollars each year.

A Second Chance for Ex-Offenders

Last week, the EEOC, stepped up enforcement in this area by filing discrimination lawsuits against two companies — the retail chain Dollar General, which operates more than 10,000 stores in 40 states, and the automaker BMW.

The suits charge the companies with violating Title VII of the Civil Rights Act by using discriminatory background-check policies that had disparate impacts on minority employees and applicants. The EEOC alleges that Dollar General disqualifies job applicants for a variety of crimes, including reckless driving or possessing drug paraphernalia, without considering the relevance of the offense to the job, as the commissions' guidelines require. According to the complaint, about 10 percent of conditionally hired black employees were discharged for failing background checks between 2004 and 2007 versus about 7 percent of others.

The complaint against BMW, which deals with a factory in Spartanburg, S.C., charges that in 2008 a new labor contractor hired by the automaker applied a company screening policy that had a disparate impact on minorities and denied employment to people who had worked at that plant for years without incident. The contractor dismissed 88 employees for having criminal records. The two companies said they would fight the lawsuits. The wiser approach would be to bring the screening policies in line with federal civil rights law.

Devil worship in prison

to LaPlante. In addition, the prisoner wants outdoor space rather than the prison basement to perform Wiccan rituals, and a communal meal on feast days.

Do you sometimes wonder how far we should take religious freedom?

If this issue were restricted to Wiccans in prison, I wouldn't bring it up this morning. But it's part of a much larger debate that I predict will escalate in coming years: If one religion can be practiced in public, shouldn't all religions expect the same access?

What about Satanists in high schools? Atheist groups on college campuses (whose numbers are proliferating these days)? One recently sponsored "Blasphemy Day" and a "War on Christmas" Party. The "Secular Student Alliance" has been called "a sort of Godless Campus Crusade for Christ"; its chapters are multiplying across the country.

Here's my belief: In a debate on the merits, the gospel will win. If Christians will "always be prepared to give an answer to everyone who asks you to give the reason for the hope that you have . . . with gentleness and respect" (1 Peter 3:15), the Spirit will always use our words and witness to advance the Kingdom. As Jesus promised, "you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free" (John 8:32).

Can we exclude Satanist and atheist groups from the same campuses where we want to share our faith? Since the government allows Christians to worship in prison, can it forbid Wiccans? On the other hand, I cannot find any prisons that provide Bibles and other Christian resources free of charge to inmates (it seems that churches donate these or prisoners buy them); should we be made to pay for Wiccan worship elements?

We are in the front line of this in the Prisons of Texas. Can you afford to ignore this?

Texas man's evangelism tract reaching thousands

"If people could understand that early in their salvation experience, then they might get it and they might stay with it," he said.

"And they might later not have such a need for reassurance or counseling and lots of other things we do as Christians."

The booklet can be used as a 30-day devotional and meditation guide with all Scriptures written out in full.

Howell's passion for the idea of being crucified with Christ reflects his own testimony. After being saved in Alaska at age 41, he began reverting back to old ways of thinking. Then God impressed on him the reality expressed in Galatians 2:20 ("I have been crucified with Christ. It is no longer I who live, but Christ who lives in me. And the life I now live in the flesh I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me.").

In response, Howell repented of his sins and began to grow in his faith. Reflecting back years later, he wants to make sure other new believers have a chance to learn the importance of dying to self and "co-crucifixion" with Christ.

"I'm just trying to get the Word out," Howell said. "I'm not a for-profit kind of guy, and I'm not trying to make a living out of this. God's blessed me in other ways. I'm just wanting to get the message out."
